The ergonomics of an office

The science of ergonomics is constantly evolving. The optimal human-friendly offices abide by certain ground rules such as work-surface adjustability, chair design, foot rests, wrist rests, screen distance and height, keyboard placement, accessibility to components, human computer interface and space savings.

These factors, when efficiently taken care of, lead to minimal musculoskeletal stress discomforts and disorders. Only when you listen to the signals of the body, do you realize that astounding work-body correlation.
